

Snapshots of the coast

It is sometimes said that we live with our backs to the sea too often and pay too little attention to what the coast has to offer, especially in the hidden spots.

This is why we always challenge readers of De Grote Rede to recognise and name the following image. As this special issue will be available throughout the centenary of WWI (2014-2018), we opted to provide the answer to this questions already in this issue (see 'In the surf' section). Consequently, no prize is awarded for this quiz question.

Wikipedia

What is shown in this picture?

The answer can be found on page 111

ANSWER TO THE QUESTION IN DE GROTE REDE 35

The beautiful flowering plant we were looking for in the previous issue of De Grote Rede is the Burnet Rose (Rosa pimpinellifolia). This small shrub displays white or sometimes pale pink flower in May-June and has prickly stems. Dark purple to black hips appear after the flowering season. The Burnet Rose typically grows on dry, mostly calcareous soil, and in Northwestern Europe it is found chiefly in coastal dunes.